

A Message to Real America

I'm going to cut through all the rhetoric for a few minutes to address a certain cross section of America. While many are worried about when and where the next act of war will strike on American soil, many are also justifiably worried about a massive encroachment on our Constitutional rights. For this reason, many of us feel we are backed into a corner. Well, we are - and with the President's address of Thursday night in Atlanta, it's time for Real Americans to take a look, not at the grand conspiracy - but at reality.

There are those that claim the government had prior knowledge of this attack. I'll give you that. There are some that say the government was directly responsible in perpetrating this act. Sorry, but I haven't seen evidence to go that far. But many among both of these groups believe the actions of September 11 will usher us in to a New World Order that many Real Americans have been fighting against for years.

Here's the bad news: You maybe correct. But where Real Americans may be mistaken is in their belief that they are alone in this fight. Do you really think radical Arabs are ready to sign on to global governance?

Yes, perhaps - if we're all facing Mecca five times a day.

Which is something I don't think the Judeo-Anglo players had in mind for whatever kind of world order they had planned. Information we have received indicates that, yes, there are those in foreign lands who are also against this New World Order, but in their minds Americans are the ones pushing it. And they make no distinction between government and civilians. How's that for being pushed into a corner? Even though some of you may have a problem with government; there are those out there that have a bigger problem - with us.

You can contact some Arab embassy and tell them that you also are against the New World Order, and you are not the enemy to their cause, but you won't get their attention. You have disqualified yourself by being an 'infidel' to their faith. You can also be defiant - preaching that everyone in the government has only a mission to expand it's power, and will let some enemy kill off as many Americans as they want - so long as that New World Order comes into being.

That's the truth about it, Real America. We can fuss all we want about Big Brother, but there is someone out there still wanting to kill us, and sitting around fussing at Washington, London or Israel won't make any of us safer.

I am not an idealist. I am not a theorist. I am a realist. And the reality is the federal government has made major power grabs following every crisis since the Constitution was written. It's their nature. It comes in part from a public too docile to do anything except wait for the government to save them, and then play armchair quarterback when they get the kind of government they deserve.

Bush gave an unprecedented speech last night. While some were looking for the things they could rail him on, I saw an opportunity that would be stupid, if not suicidal to pass up. Bush did everything to call on the unorganized militias of the several states he could without mentioning the word militia. He didn't have to tell them to get prepared. They began doing that on September 11. They called their loved ones. They loaded up with gas tanks. They bought guns and ammo. They stocked up on antibiotic. They went back to Prayer. They went back to their houses of worship. Many people suddenly became Americans again, even dusting off the words of our forefathers. Sorry, but I cannot believe this is some grand scheme of the New World Order.

Bush stated, "We will ask state and local officials to create a new modern civil defense service, similar to local volunteer fire departments, to respond to local emergencies when the manpower of governments is stretched thin." Well, he'll have to clear out a bunch of federal bureaucracy to get that done, but this doesn't sound like a new federal program or FEMA takeover to me. Some local agencies were doing this before Bush even mentioned it. No doubt these words angered those who want more federal control. But here is our chance to become Real Americans.

What if everyone held Bush to his word? This would mean actually volunteering for local action in your local communities - with neighbors, friends and family. Even if I'm wrong, and this is just some New World Order plot, it can't hurt. In fact, no matter who the enemy really is, this is a good start for a basic sound defense for any nation - especially this one.

Yes, I understand there are major issues with the federal government's power at this time. I share those concerns as well. But by becoming an integral and active participant within our local communities, we can still reach out to others with the right message, and have a better bargaining chip if and when this mess is over.

And if (God forbid) Washington falls, then we'll still have thousands of local defense networks already setup and running to continue the battle.

There are people who are against Washington and London's version of a global government. And they got the guts to take this battle right in our faces, with disposable soldiers to tilt the scales in their favor. They expect us to fracture. It would be to their benefit for us to turn on our government, and have our government turn on us. I believe the message that needs to be sent to the enemy is, "Forget the government - you've pissed off the American people - a much more dangerous force to reckon with." And after we're done defeating this foreign enemy, we can sit down in Washington, New York, or wherever and say with victory already being achieved, "NO to the New World Order". Meanwhile, we gotta nation to save.

... and I might go find out if our local volunteer fire department needs a few more good men.

Let's Roll!
